SINGLE MALTS

Scotland plays host to over one hundred whisky distilleries, the single greatest concentration in the world. Most of them produce malt whisky, using only malted barley and traditional pot stills. The term 'Single Malt' means whisky that is produced by a single distillery. Single malt whiskies tend to reflect the climate and geographical characteristics of the region they come from. There are four main regions, namely the Highland, Lowland, Islay and Speyside.

ISLAY

The Island of Islay (pronounced Eye-la') is the south of the Western Isles and lies on the eastern side of Kintyre.

It is flat, green and very largely composed of peat-the water on the island is brown with it. Winter gales drive salt spray far inland and this saturates the peat, which is dried again by the briny, seaweedy breeze and these characteristics give way to flavour its malt.

SPEYSIDE

The Speyside area is situated at the north of the Cairngorm mountain and goes to the Moray Firth. Two rivers delimit it namely the Findhorn at the west side and the Deveron on the east side. The area is named after the river Spey. Most of the distilleries take their water in one of its affluent; the Fiddich, the Livet or the Avon. Speyside whiskies are essentially sweet. They have a little peaty character and have a whiff of smoke and their salient characteristic is estery. They take maturation in sherry-wood well and can be rich and full bodied, medium and light-bodied.

HIGHLAND

This is the mountainous part of Scotland where streams tumbling over granite, heather hills and green glens introduced interesting flavours and aromas to the malt whiskies. Whisky produced here uses water that has flowed over peat bogs, which impart a smoky flavour.

LOWLAND

Lowland whiskies generally have a dry finish, which makes them excellent aperitifs. The dryness comes from the malt itself, not from peat as Lowlands tend to use unpeated malt, this also lends a certain sweet fruitiness to the flavour and mouthfeel. Their aromatic intensity is low and tends to be grassy or herbal, with grainy and floral notes.

INDIA

India and Scotland are very different in climate. Indeed, single malt in India matures much faster, and it is for this reason that we see no age statements, most expressions are only a few years old. As with all single malt whiskies, Indian single malt must be matured for a minimum of three years and a day in oak casks, and it is the produce of a single distillery, distilled from nothing other than water, yeast and malted barley. Indian single malt whiskies are known for their fruity, malty character.
